Village of Maidensdale

Small dale between Vineburrow and Oakwood was the first test of little Sedna as to what she could do, so took its name and emblem from her, for maiden was lady Sedna Will O'Wisp. She built the village all on her own but it would never surpass its neighbours. Sporadic clashes in the borders had no result, and Maidensdale remained squeezed between them. Although always a small village, it managed to have a significant production of barrels and beer (of good quality) till Lady Sedna passed her possession to Lady Fantine Fredom.

Named after a cake that Adnan asked from its subjects to celebrate the first Will O'Wisp settlement, the barony is still today a bastion of civilisation in a deteriorating Terra Borealis. Originally a crescent-shaped settlement around its castle, has now developed in a small town with several neighbourhoods: Oldfork with the temple of Urgos and cemetery, The Arcade with taverns and the old lime kiln, Southside and Christmas Place with rich people's houses, Northing with monkey business and contacts from the nearby countryside, The Parcel with the bulk of agrarian populace, and the newly built Eastbelt and Clayslums.

Central to all these neighbourhoods, Adnan's castle is the sleepless guard of the barony area, and a rather formidable castle of the viceroyalty of Cerluxna, up north. A rather unique feature of this town is orchard belts among the neighbourhoods, namely Westbelt, Southbelt and Eastbelt.

Walnut Cake is surrounded by a rather huge hay field prairie of more than 500 arpents, suitable for the main product of the town, work horses. For a long time Walnut Cake is the leader of these horses holding the seat of the society and the best quality in the world but lately Lady Edna lost the presidency. Southwest of the town a medium vineyard provides a rather splendid and expensive wine and walnut orchards frame the agrarian Temple of Summer Kaabe and Winter Ove Ash. Other products with significant (more than a five thousand daily gold of sales) include bread, water, flowers, mutton (a named variety smoked lightly with walnut shells), rabbits, raw grapes and other mainly agricultural products.
